ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

We are deeply appreciative to Louis Messiah and the team at Scribe who asked us to participate in the Northern Philly History Festival. We had been meaning to research our ancestors in NoLibs more thoroughly and Scribes' reach out to us gave us the impetus and the opportunity.

We are grateful to Dr. Emma Lapsansky-Werner whose 1968 work Before the Model City first laid the foundation for further Northern Liberties exploration.

We are grateful to Dr. Julie Winch who has helped us find sources for this research.

Finally, we are grateful to ancestor Dr. Janet Harrison Shannon who first honored the Black Northern Liberties community with her 1991 dissertation Community Formation: Blacks in Northern Liberties, 1790-1850.

and raises hogs for sale." Beginning in 1819, we begin to learn more about the residents as individuals. Tax assessors' records reveal interesting information about residents who lived in the 6th ward in Northern Liberties from 1819 to 1826. In 1819, fourteen blacks were assessed. Ten of them owned a total of thirteen houses and fourteen lots with a total assessed value of $6,310. In 1820, fourteen blacks owned sixteen houses and fifteen lots, assessed at $3,700; in 1821, six owned seven houses and seven lots assessed at $2,300. The next year the records indicated that of the thirteen blacks who were assessed, eight owned a total of thirteen houses and thirteen lots, assessment--$4,800. In 1823, ten blacks were recorded. Eight owned thirteen houses and eight lots with an assessed value of $2,150. In 1824, only eight blacks appeared on the assessor's ledger. Seven owned a total of thirteen houses and eight lots, assessed at $2,650. In 1825, thirteen blacks were assessed, eight of whom owned seventeen houses and twelve lots valued at $2,850. In 1826, ten were assessed; seven owned a total of eleven houses and nine lots valued for taxation at $2,850.

APPLE AND CULVERT

The intersection of Apple and Culvert (Now North Lawrence and St. John Newman Way) housed multiple Black homeowners and businesses in the 1830s and 1840s.

John Murray

Story

John Murray was the head of a family of four, three of whom were not native to Pennsylvania, indicating that they could have self-emancipated. He was a waiter and his wife was a washer. They lived at 59 George Street, which was between 5th and 4th in Northern Liberties. In 2024, John Murray's descendent Dr. Kelli Rachine Barnes, a Mellon Humanities Fellow at Independence Hall, and creator of the Invisible Architects of Freedom Digital Archive, discovered that John Murray was her direct ancestor.

Dr. Barnes shared the finding on Instagram. This photo is of John Murray's son John Henry Murray, who was one of the children listed in the 1838 Census. John Henry Murray was a member of the 24th Regiment of the US Colored Troops - Company K. He was also a chaplain of the Prince Hall Masons. This picture shows him in his masonic regalia.

Lambsong

Story

Lambsong (no first name) lived at the intersection of Apple and Culvert. In the 1838 Pas Census, there were three people in the family, two were not native. He was a confectioner and his wife was a washer. He attended Washington Hall Church. He was a homeowner. He is listed as a business owner in the 1838 Register of Trades. Two people in the home belong to beneficial societies.

Story

Rebecca Lambsong may be the wife of Lambsong. She is not in the 1838 or 1847 Census. However, she does have a will dated 17 March 1847 where she leaves all of her belongings to her sister, Hannah Hicks. Hannah Hicks is in the 1847 PAS Census and lives near the intersection of Apple and Culvert, at 126 Apple, close to where Lambsong lived. Notably, Isaac Riggs and James Julias (see entries) are both listed as executors on the will.

She was an active member of the Underground Railroad.

Robert Hicks

Story

Robert Hicks is listed in the 1838 PAS Census. He lived on Apple above Culvert. No other person is listed in the home. He was a carpenter and owned his own home. His property was valued at $2400, which is significantly higher than the surrounding properties. This could be because he may have owned the properties in the alley at 950 North Lawrence, which is where Hannah Hicks lived in the 1847 PAS Census. He noted in the census that he freed himself. He attended St. Georges church.

Robert Hicks purchased his home in 1822 for $1 from Robert Green who was most likely the Robert Green who was a trustee of Bethel church. The deed indicates that this was the satisfaction of a debt.

Story

In the 1847 PAS Census, Hannah Hicks lived at 126 Apple Street. She lived with one female under 15, most probably a grandchild. She was a widow over 50 years old. Both members of the household were native to the state of Pennsylvania. Hannah's occupation was washer. She was a homeowner, and a member of a beneficial society.

16 people (including Hannah and the child in her household) are listed at 124 Apple Street. The census taker listed each household individually - five households in total. One child attended Northern Liberties public school.

Hannah may have been related to Robert Hicks, who owned $2400 in property, which may have been many homes.

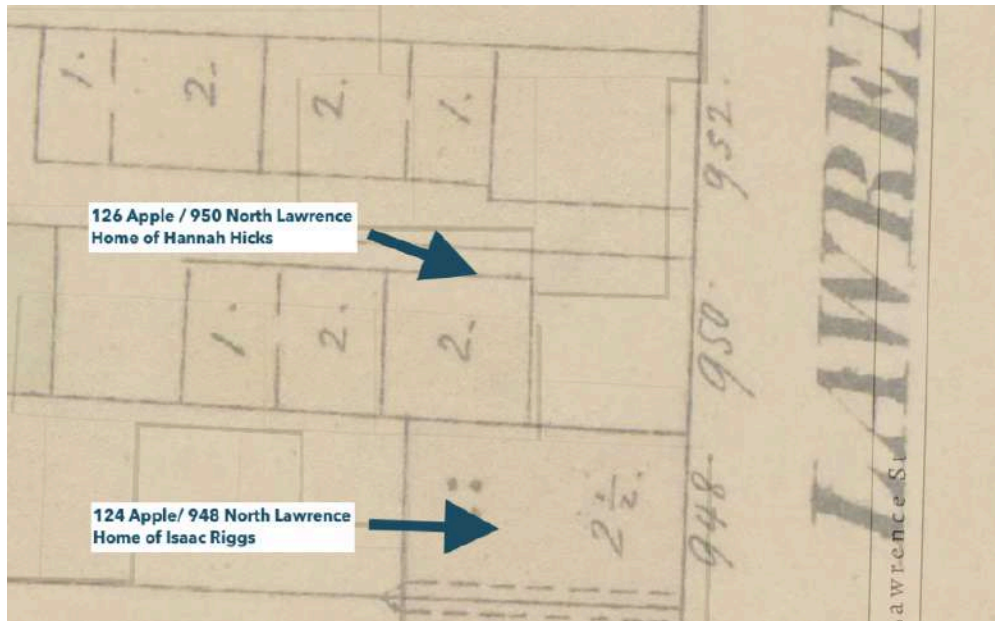

This home may have served as an Underground Railroad safehouse or immediate shelter upon arriving. The William Carey household is listed as coming from out of state. The note in Census is that he was manumitted by George Dorman of Delaware.

Hannah may be the sister of Rebecca Lambsong (see entry) who also lived on Apple above Calvert.

Sources

Hannah Hicks home may have been composed of multiple homes. We have been able to find the home next to hers, which was 124 Apple Street (See Isaac Riggs). This serves as a key to unlock the locations of all the houses on the block.

Will, Pennsylvania, U.S., Wills and Probate Records, 1683-1993, Wills, No 50-99, 1847, Ancestry.com

Story

Two households are listed at 124 Apple Street. Homeowner Maria McCommic is listed as the head of a household of 4 people, all women under 50. Her occupation is 'washing/ironing'.

Isaac Riggs is listed in the 1847 PAS Census at 124 Apple Street. He was married and had a child under 5 years old. All three in the household are listed as natives of Pennsylvania. Isaac was a Brick Maker. He and his wife were member of beneficial societies. The remark in the census is that he 'lives free of rent in his mother's house'.

Isaac Riggs is listed as an executor on Rebecca Lambsong's (see entry) will.

Based on the death certificate for Isaac we believe that the family attended Zoar.

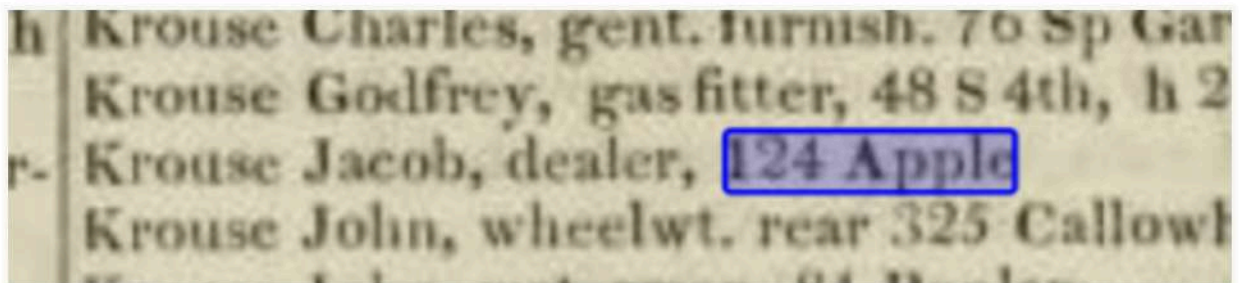

Rebecca McCormick lived on this block until 1863. Her will indicates more connections to the Northern Liberties community. David Bustill Bowser and Charles Bustill were witnesses to her will.

At that time she owned 954 North Lawrence. In the 1860 Hexamer and Locher map, 954 is actually a court of wooden homes. There were approximately 40 individual dwellings at the time on the west side of North Lawrence.

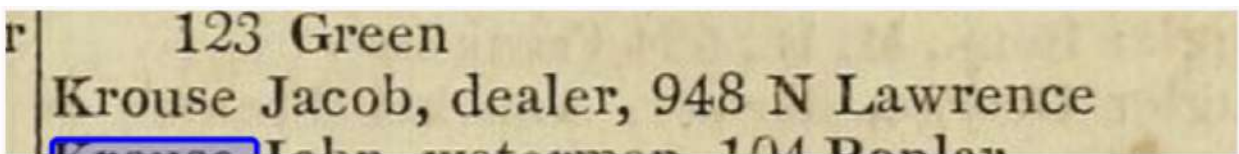

Jacob C. White was the executor.

Street Key

For the East side of Lawrence our street key comes from 101 Apple. In 1855, one year after consolidation, the street numbers and street names had not changed.

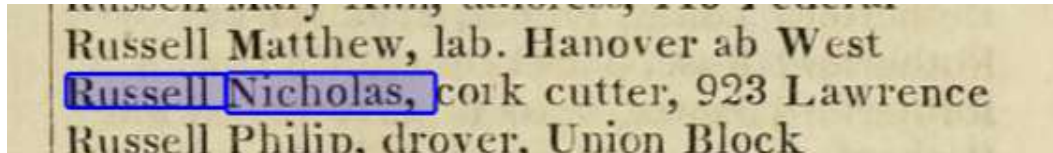

1855 City Directory

Albert Michael, crimper, Franklin ad 40
Albert Michael, tailor, 101 Apple
Alberti Geo. F. crupper 9 Clair bel Carr

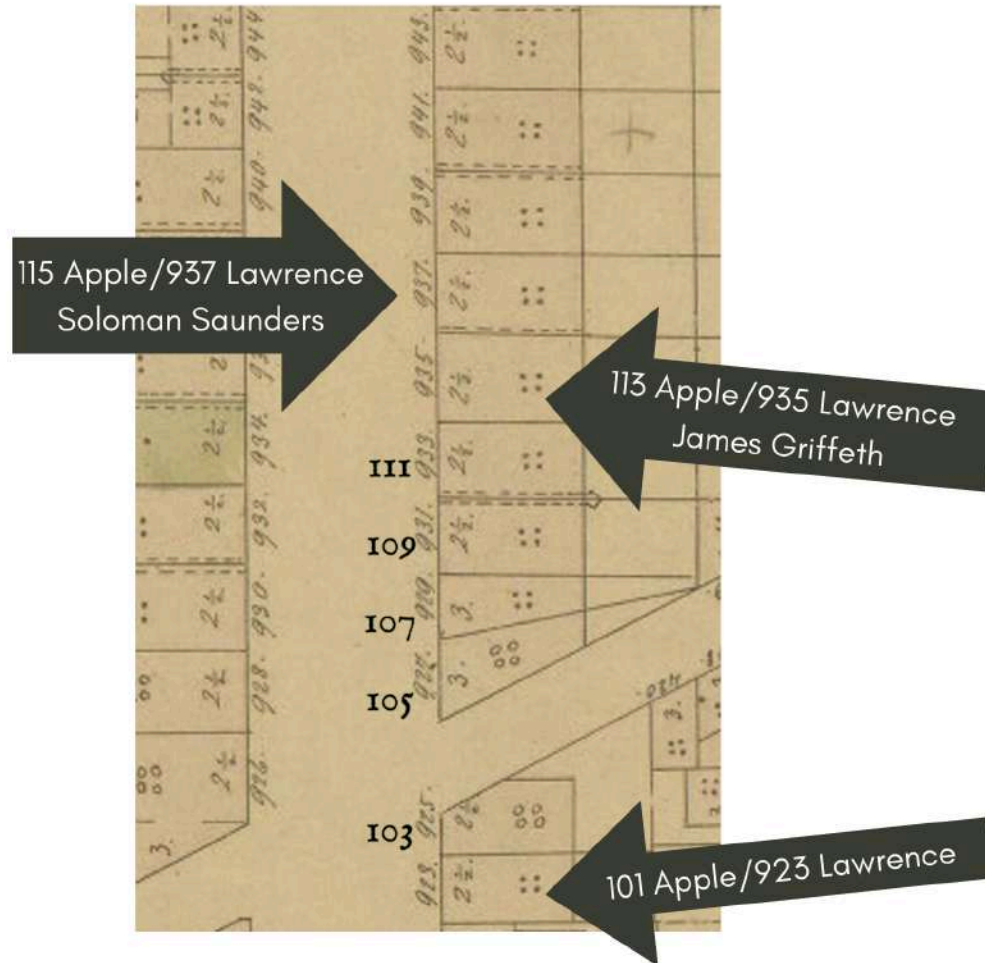

In the 1857 directory it appears that the name of the street changed but not the street numbers.

In the 1858 City Directory, the street numbers are then changed

In this way we know that 923 Lawrence was once 101 Lawrence. If the street numbers proceeded in order, without skipping numbers then 113 Apple turned into 935 Lawrence and 115 Apple turned into 937 Lawrence.

William Still

William Still lived in Northern Liberties in 1844 when he first came to Philadelphia.

This he found on Fifth street above Poplar. It was an old frame shanty, of rickety construction and slim proportion, yet it sufficed to bar the weather, and was quite as palatial as his limited means and uncertain prospects enabled him to afford. It could scarcely be called urban, for it was quite adjacent to commons, corn-fields, potato-patches, and brick-yards.

RAWLE AND ORCHARD STREET

The intersection of Rawle and Orchard street (now Oakney and Reno) is now a park but it used to have numerous rowhouses. 17 households of 64 people were counted in the 1847 PAS census.

David Leary

Story

David Leary lived at Rawle and Orchard. There were eleven people in his household. Three of whom were under 15 and attending school at the Northern Liberties Public School. Two were not natives of Pennsylvania. Leary was a tanner and his wife was a washer. In the remarks by the census taker, there is note that there are '3 boys worthless' under 20. It's not clear if this was a frustrated father calling out his children in front of the census taker or if this was a judgment by the census taker. Three members of the household belonged to beneficial societies, and 5 attended church services. David Leary was manumitted by Mary George of Delaware.

Scipio Cornish

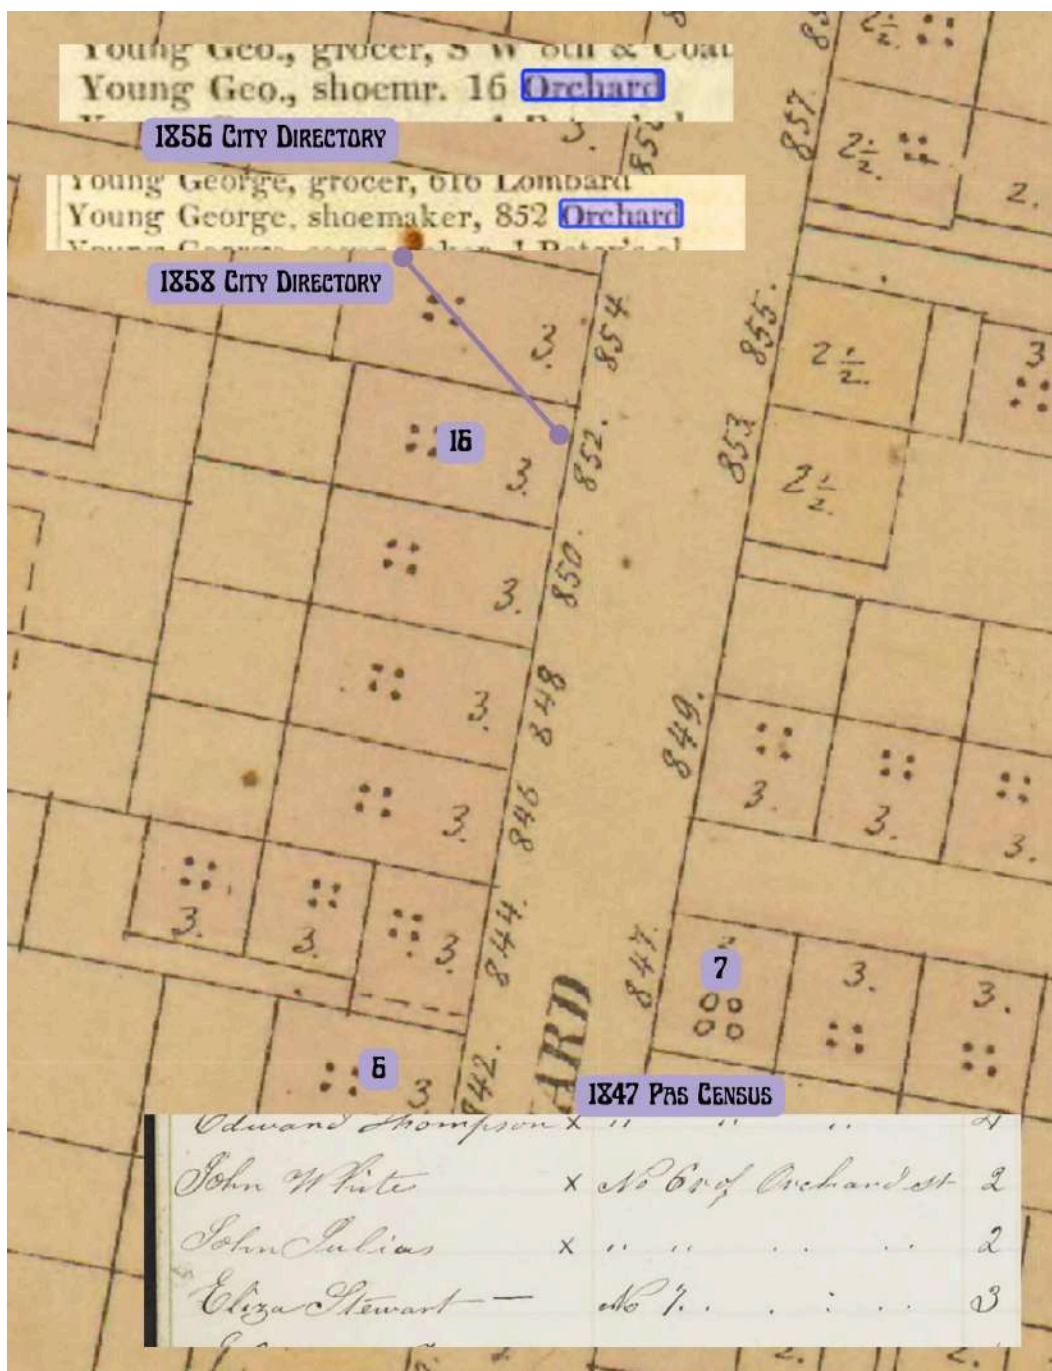

Story:

Scipio Cornish is listed at the intersection of Rawle and Orchard in the 1847 census. There are six people in his household; a wife and 4 children. 2 of the children attend Northern Liberties public school. 2 members of the household belong to beneficial societies and attend religious services. He is a drayman and wife is a washer. He owns three horses and three carts (dray).

Story:

George Julius is listed in the 1847 census as living on Orchard Street. There are 5 people in the family, 3 of whom are 15. George is listed as “Jobbing” and his wife as “washing” for occupations. 2 children attend Northern Liberties Public School.

APPLE ABOVE BROWN

Mother Zoar Methodist church sat on Brown street just before Apple. Here we begin to see the center of activities and life for this community. We know that Zoar had a library. Brown is broader than the streets in the neighborhood. The homes are brick instead of wood and slightly bigger. Perry Tilghman, Zion's Pastor in the 1830s, lived on the North East corner of this intersection. Two men who grew up in the alleys around Apple in the 1830s, had moved into more substantial large brick townhomes by the 1860s.

James Julius and James Julius Jr.

Will, Pennsylvania, U.S., Wills and Probate Records, 1683-1993, Wills, No 50-99, 1847, Ancestry.com

By early 1860s, James Julius and James Julius Jr. are both listed as living at 827 North Lawrence in the city directories. James Jr. is a barber and James Sr. is a coachman. It's possible that James G. Julius was George Julius listed on Orchard in the 1847 PAS Census. According to his death certificate James Julius was born 1799. He is listed in the 1830 and 1840 US Census. James Jr. served in the Civil War with the Colored Troops, 25th Regiment.

James Julius is listed as executor of Rebecca Lambsong's (see entry) will.

Perry Tilghman - Zoar AME

Perry Tilghman was Mother Zoar's first African American Pastor. In the 1838 Census Perry Tilghman lived in at 159 Brown Street. We know that 158 Brown became 416 Brown. Therefore we know that at 159 Brown probably became 417 Brown. Note that he was only 20 when he became pastor.

Perry Tilghman was a member of the Benezet Joint Stock Association and eventually moved to Currant Alley.

The Robert Vaux school originally started in the basement of Zoar school. Started in 1833 the school was eventually led by Jacob C. White, Jr. in the 1850s and 60s. The school eventually outgrew its first location and became a Philadelphia public school. Jacob C. White, Jr. was a graduate of the Institute for Colored Youth, and was born and raised in Northern Liberties. This means that the Institute for Colored Youth 'birthed' a Philadelphia public school when Vaux became public and Jacob C. White, Jr. became the first Black principal of a school in Philadelphia.

Roberts Vaux Unclassified School, Coates street near Fifth. Established in 1833. David R. Murrell, Principal, and one female assistant. Boys 112; Girls 24; total 136; average attendance 93.

“Zoar United Methodist Church, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, traditionally the oldest African American congregation within the United Methodist Church, was founded in 1794 by eighteen free African-Americans, fifteen men and three women. The founders had separated themselves from the white-dominated St. George's Methodist Episcopal Church but chose to remain in Methodism with its traditions of early opposition to slavery, evangelical style of preaching, and ministering to social needs. The early members first worshipped from house to house, then met in an abandoned butcher shop at Brown and Fourth Streets in the Campingtown area of Philadelphia.

Originally known as African Zoar, a church was constructed near the site and dedicated on August 4, 1796 by Bishop Francis Asbury.

(NOTE THAT HARRY HOSIER IS NOT MENTIONED HERE)

Although Zoar was mentioned as a separate church in the records of the Philadelphia Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church as early as 1811, it was administered by St. George's, which supplied its pastors. Zoar established two mutual aid societies, the Beneficial Philanthropic Sons of Zoar and the Female Beneficial Philanthropic Society of Zoar in 1826. During this period, a number of members left Zoar to join Richard Allen in the African Methodist Episcopal Church.

In 1832, a “plan of separation” from St. George's was adopted to take effect in three years. In 1835, the “Covenant of Assumption” made possible the assignment of Zoar's first African-American pastor, Rev. Perry Tilghman, who served until 1844. Zoar was chartered by the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania on June 14, 1837. During the 1830s and 1840s, the Church was presumably a link on the Underground Railroad along with other African-American Methodist churches in Philadelphia.” NYPL

Zoar had a library and we know the books because that record is preserved at the Historical Society of Pennsylvania in the Leon Gardiner collection.

Zoar had more women than men in the early 19th century and was also known as the mariners church.

ZOAR

MORE WOMEN THEN MEN

“At St. George's and Zoar, however, women outnumbered men by about two to one and four to three re-spectively. The registers for these groups seem also to indicate that many female members were unmarried, or at least that they joined the Methodist society independently of their husbands. Twenty of the 30 women at St. George's in 1794 appear without men of the same last name. Even more striking, 29 of the 34 women joining Zoar during and after the revivals of 1800-1801 joined without a spouse.²⁴”

MARINERS

“Of the twenty-six men who joined Zoar from 1800 to 1802, as many as seven appear to have been mariners, including Ignatious Cooper, John Farroon, Benjamin Jackson, Francis James, Nero Luff, Henry Williams, and George Yorker. In the nineteenth century the name "Zoar" came to refer specifically to a chapel for seamen.²⁶”

ZOAR was attacked and destroyed in 1813

The significance of the black church as an institution in the community has long been recognized. Church destruction occurred in Northern Liberties as early as 1813 and continued through the 1820s and beyond in the city and county. Northern Liberties' riot had a lasting effect on some who recalled it later at a time when other riots plagued the city and county. A committee appointed to investigate the Philadelphia riot of 1834 remembered:

nearly twenty years ago, there was, in this district, an out-breaking of popular discontent, which issued in the destruction of a place of worship, of the colored people, in the Northern Liberties.

(Committee Report on the Causes of the Philadelphia Race Riots, 1834, p. 170)

An occurrence in 1813 in Northern Liberties also substantiates early, collective violence. On November 8, 1813:

a riot took place in the Northern Liberties in consequence of an excited state of feeling between the whites and the blacks. A colored man had fired upon and wounded a white man--an occurrence which created intense excitement and a feeling of animosity against the negroes. The hostility vented itself in an assault on the black people, and culminated in an attack on Zoar Church, which was nearly torn down by the mob. Subsequently, the meeting-house was repaired and put into use.

(Scharf and Wescott, 1886, p. 975)

Again, the facts surrounding the initial assault are not known: however, we are aware that these were financially

COATES STREET

Coates was home to many families who belonged to Union. Francis Fawcett settled on this street, just a few doors down from Union. Redmon Faucett, his son, was born on Coates. Francis is buried at Union as well, and he is most likely still interred there. His family lived in the neighborhood until the 1880s.

Redmon Faucet - Union AME

Story:

The Faucet family were active early members and builders of the Union A.M.E Church. Union was originally started in 1809 when 18 members of Zoar left and started a church. By 1816 they had built a structure. Early founder Mary Lewton was also the UGRR Station Leader at Paschall's Alley.

“Redmon Faucett was born on Coates street, (now Fairmount avenue), in Philadelphia, Pa., near where the old A. M. E. Union Church was located, and almost within its shadows.

His parents were staunch lovers of the doctrines and teachings of the A. M.E. Church, and it can be said of him that he nursed African Methodism at the same time he received nutriment from his mother's breast.

His earliest recollections are connected with the Sabbath-school and church. At an early period he was sent to public school; he has said that he has no recollection of when he could not read.

At ten years of age he was well posted in the various branches then taught reading, writing, arithmetic, grammar, geography and history.

When his father died, which occurred before he was thirteen years of age, his mind was well stored with useful knowledge.

Indeed, so well pleased was his teacher, Mr. Murray, that he presented him with a treatise on geometry and a case of mathematical instruments.

Brother Faucett early gave himself up to the Sabbath-school work.

Many of his youthful years were spent as a scholar, teacher and superintendent.”

A brief history of the church reveals that the institution was founded in 1809 when 18 members of the Zoar M. E. Church, now located at Melon st. near 12th, having decided that they could better develop themselves religiously under their own leadership, started Union Mission.

A lot was purchased on Fairmount ave. below Fifth st. and the first wooden structure was erected in 1816. For fear of interference with the M. E. Church protection was sought from the Bethel A. M. E. Church in the same year.

PASCHALL'S ALLEY

Paschall's Alley, later called Lynd Street, and now called Wallace street, has been called out by two important 19th Century Black History historians as being an Underground Railroad junction, where thousands found refuge. Oral history says that the notes from the first Vigilant Committee (1838) were found in Zoar's basement, just before the building was torn down. UGRR giants Isaiah C. Wears and Jacob C. White had homes just a few blocks away. Additionally the Hicksite spilt started at the Green Street meeting house. Quakers in the neighborhood may have provided another buffer of support. With two churches, wealthy Black UGRR leaders, and white allies all in proximity, we think of Paschall's Alley as more of the center, the proverbial North, for people self-liberating from enslavement.

Mary Lewton

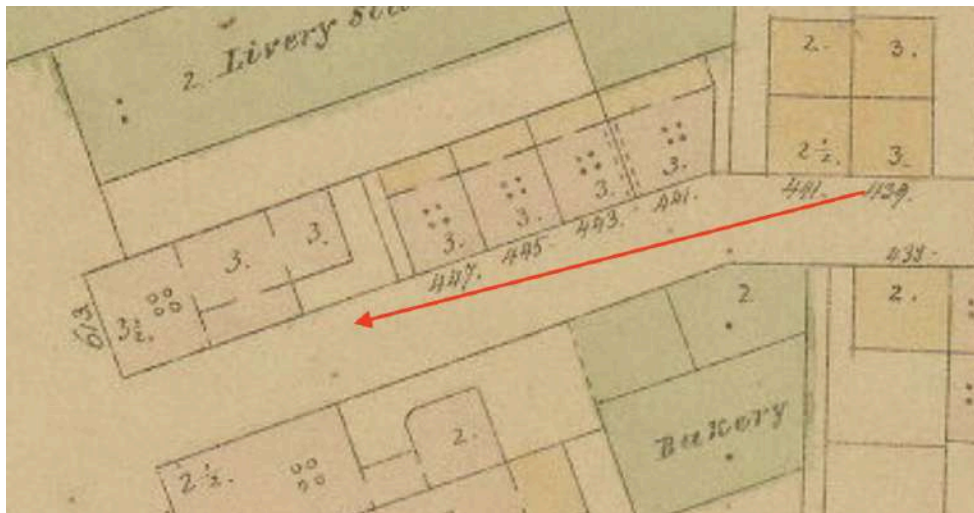

Story:

John Lewton purchased his home on Paschall's alley in 1809. We know from the distance described in the deed and the 1860 Hexamer and Locher map, that the house number was 25 Paschalls/439 Lynd street. Mary Lewton is said to be one of the founders of Union church, and the mother of this block that served as an Underground Railroad Junction.

In the 1838 census John Lewton is listed as a carter and Mary Lewton does her 'own work'. The property is valued at $1200 which means that it may have been multiple properties. One child is in school. There are 6 people in the household and 4 are not native to the state.

John Lewton's funeral was held in 1855 on Paschall's Alley at their home.

A bakery was across the street.

Susan and Redmon Fauset - Paschall's Alley

Story:

Susan Fauset, mother of Redmon, appears on Paschall's alley in 1847, a year after her husband dies (see entry for Francis Fawcett). The family is at 15 Paschall's alley. There are 6 people in the family, 6 are not native of the state. 3 are attending school. 2 are the Northern Liberties and 1 is at the Lombard Street school. Two of the males are barbers. Susan's occupation is listed as 'House Cleaning'.

Redmon goes on to become a community religious and civil rights leader. He is a member of the Benezet Joint Stock Association, active in the Social Civil and Statistical Association and an AME preacher.

His daughter Jesse Redmon Fauset is widely known as the mother of the Harlem Renaissance. Recruited by DuBois to be the editorial lead of The Crisis magazine in the 1920s, her decisions top platform artists like Zora Neale Huston, Langston Hughes, Alain Locke and Countee Cullen cemented their rise into literary stardom and ensured we continue to know and celebrate these artists.
